This documentary follows the journey of Warren Cariou, a writer from northern Saskatchewan, who learns that oil sands companies from Alberta are expanding into his homeland. Warren travels back to the Cree and Dene community of La Loche and to the nearby Metis village of Buffalo Narrows to ask people what they hope the development will bring in the future, and also what they fear about it. He then travels across the border to Alberta and speaks to the Indigenous people there who have lived with oil sands development for more than thirty years. The film provides a personal and compelling portrait of Indigenous communities and their struggle to preserve their way of life in the face of rapid and relentless change.
